FROM THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

AMUSEMENTS OF CLERGYMEN.

Mr. EDITOR—It was the advice of Sir Thomas More to his children, "Let virtue be your food, & amusement be your sauce;" but according to some writers, every kind of sauce must be interdicted to the clergy, which puts me in mind of the condition of the domestick chaplain mentioned in the Guardian, who was looked upon as an intruder for staying to partake of the more luxurious part of an entertainment. Calvin allowed sports even upon the Lord's day; Alexander Newell, the exemplary Dean of of St. Paul's, was a devoted angler; and Dr. Doddridge confesses his attachment to card-playing. But I shall content myself at present with producing a very curious letter on this subject, written in answer to some complaints made against him, by that zealous Calvinist, the Rev. Augustine Toplady, who was accustomed to play at cards with Mr. Gurney, the short-hand writer. This practice having attracted notice, and given offence to the more precise professors, drew from Mr. Toplady the following justification, addressed to the late Mr. George Flower an eminent stationer in the city.

"Broadhembury, Nov. 19, 1773.

VERY DEAR SIR.—Never apologize to me, I beseech you, for any religious freedoms which you may be friendly enough to take. Without pretending to the apostolical gift of intuitive discernment, I know too much of your heart, to be offended at such real instances of your esteem. I must be a monster of pride, were I capable of resenting an intimation which breathes such sincerity of regard, and which you have the happy art of conveying with such delicacy of politeness. Instead of wishing you to intermit your labour of love, I request you to reprove, to rebuke, and to exhort me, as, in your opinion, occasion may require. Some individuals of what is called the religious world, are so very pert and impertinent, that I have been obliged to treat them as I would the officiousness of wasps, and give them a gentle flap, to keep them at their due distance. But, without any shadow of compliment, I have so great and just an idea of the valuable friend to whom I am now writing, that I am desirous not to repel, but to invite and caress, his truly affectionate admonitions.—They even induce me to love him the better, and respect him the more; nor can he bind me to him by a stronger tie.

As you, dear Sir, have unbosomed your thoughts, with such transparency of genuine faithfulness, I also, in return, will for once, consider you as my father confessor, and open my whole mind to you, on the subject in hand, without disguise or reserve.

1. I do not think that honest Martin Luther committed sin, by playing at backgammon for an hour or two after dinner, in order, by unbending his mind, to promote digestion.

2. I cannot blame the holy martyr, Bishop Ridley, for frequently playing at tennis, before he became a prelate; nor for playing at the more serious game of chess, twice a day after he was made a bishop.

3. As little do I find fault with another of our most exemplary martyrs, the learned and devout Mr. Archdeacon Philpot, who has left it on record, as a brand on the Pelagians of that age, "that they looked on honeste pastyme as a synne," and had the impudence to call him an Antinomian, and a loose moralist, because he now and then relaxed his brow with "huntynge, shootynge, bowlynge, and such lyke."

4. Nor can I set down the pious bishop Latimer for an enemy to holiness of life, on account of his saying that hunting is a good exercise for men of rank, & that shooting is as lawful an amusement for persons of inferiour class.

5. I have not a whit the worse opinion of the eminent and profound Mr. Thomas Gataker, for the treatise which he professedly wrote to prove the lawfulness of card-playing, under due restrictions and limitations.

6. I think good bishop Beveridge was quite innocent in amusing himself with his violin.

7. The seraphick Mr. Hervey is, in my idea, entitled to no manner of censure, for allowing the devout father of "Miss Mitissa and Miss Serena," to attend his daughters "once or twice, to the the theatrical entertainments and publick diversions;" nor yet for allowing him to let the said misses "learn to dance, in order to acquire a genteel air and a graceful demeanour."

Observe, that in producing Mr. Hervey's judgment concerning the not absolute unlawfulness of all stage entertainments, and other publick diversions, I do not mean to enter a plea for myself. I have seen but three plays since I took orders; i. e. for these eleven years and a half, and probably shall never see another: not because I am persuaded of its being sinful (for I think I might as innocently see Shakespeare's Henry IV. acted on the stage, as read the history of that prince by my own fire-side) but because I consider the play-house as too publick a place of amusement for a clergyman to frequent. Moreover I was never once at Vauxhall nor at Ranelah, for the very same reason and for no other. Neither was I ever at an assembly, except once; viz. several years ago at Weymouth, in mere complaisance to Mrs. Macauly; though we both abstained from touching a card. While there, we only saw and were seen, and chatted with those we knew.—But enough of this digression.

8. I cannot unsaint St. Chrysostom, for admiring the comedies of Aristophanes to such a degree, as to read them perpetually, and even to lay them under his pillow when he slept.

9. I do not think it criminal in that great good, and useful man, Mr. Madan, to indulge himself in horse-racing, and in hunting, fishing, and shooting. He himself makes no secret of all this; else I would certainly have omitted to mention it.—Now I am not attached to any of these sports. Not to the first, for I utterly dislike it: nor to the second, because I am rather a timid rider; nor to the third, because I have neither time nor patience enough; nor to the fourth, for I never fired a gun in my life. But shall I, like those in Hudibras, and like too many censorious professors now,

Compound for things I am inclined to,
By blaming what I have no mind to?

God forbid! Let every man judge for himself, and stand or fall to his own master above.

10. Archbishop Williams required but two hours sleep in the twenty four. On the other hand, Bishop Kenn seems to have required twelve; for he says,

Dull sleep, of sense me to deprive!
I am but half my time alive.

11. Shall I question the piety of good old Mr. Moses Browne, because he finds a pleasure in angling for trout and eels? He shewed me when I was last in London, some sheets of the new edition (since published) of his "Eclogues on Fishing," he is fond of that recreation himself, and as fond of instructing others in it. Is he therefore ungodly? Or (permit me to ask) is there half so much loss of time at a pool of quadrille as an anglers hook and line are attended with?—I must add, which has least of cruelty in it? the depriving real fishes of life by the most excruciating torture, or the playing for fishes made of ivory or mother of pearl?

12. I will not set in judgement on my dear friends, Mr. and Mrs. Flower for having their amiable daughter, the fair inquisitive, taught to play on the harpsichord, to dance, &c. &c. Nor am I angry with the fair inquisitive herself, for being one of the most elegant and accomplished females that ever were entitled to that character.

13. I cannot condemn the vicar of Broadhembury* for relaxing himself now and then among a few select friends with a rubber of sixpenny whist, a pool of penny quadrille, or a few rounds of twopenny Pape Joan.—to my certain knowledge, the said vicar has been cured of the headache by one or the other of those games, after spending eight, ten, twelve, and sometimes sixteen hours in his study. Nor will he ask any man's leave for so unbending himself.

1. Because another man's conscience is no rule to his, any more than another person's stature or complexion.

2. Because the word of God, no where either directly or indirectly, says one syllable or drops one hint, concerning the lawfulness or the unlawfulness of amusement by lots. And I would no more add to the commandments than to the doctrines of God.

3. Because the Apostle says, "Blessed is he who condemns not himself in the thing that he allows:" which is exactly my case.

4. Because the same Apostle asks, "Why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?" And so say I.

5. Because I do not find myself hurt by this liberty, either in mind, body, or estate.—Not in mind; for my mind is sensibly relieved by it.—Not in body; for my body is sensibly the better for it.—Not in estate: for that cannot possibly suffer by it. I neither win nor lose forty shillings per annum.

Doubtless, Mr. Madan, Mr. Browne, & others, have stumbled some weak Christians" many a time, by following and vindicating such unhallowed amusements.—And those Christians must, I think, be VERY WEAK indeed, who can stumble at a straw, and break their shins against a barley-corn!

A very worthy female intimated to me last spring in London, that I "offended some weak brethern and made them stumble, by allowing myself to play at cards." As this was very seriously said, I was going to make a serious answer. But my gravity suffered more than a stumble, for it actually fell, on surveying the head-dress of the fair expostulatress. I could not help asking with a smile: "And suppose a weak sister was to stumble at your elegant pyramid of hair, wire, and crinkt ribbons, would you therefore reduce your attire to the taste of that weak sister?" The good woman honestly replied, in some disconcertment, "no, indeed."—"Then give liberty as well as take it." I could not help thinking of the lady and the patch, mentioned in the 57th number of the Spectator.

And so much, my dear friend, for the grand subject of your letter. I hope our correspondence will, in future, turn on topicks more edifying and improving. Surely they, who are led by divine grace to experience the best things of God's spiritual kingdom, should learn to look on things indifferent with the indifference they deserve.

I have hardly left myself room to assure you of the regard with which I am, &c.

A. TOPLADY.

* Mr. Toplady was at this time the resident incumbent of that parish in Devonshire.

From the Bridgeport Courier.

"To the Right-about Face."

MR. PRINTER—I recollect very well when I was a Boy, and used to go to training, of hearing those words of command given by old Capt. Hardin, (and a very fine captain he was too) and I deem it a very good command to many, as well out of the military as in.

When I see a man very immoderate in politics, discarding candour, destroying his own happiness and other people's comforts, by his overheated zeal, I think that he had better halt, and before he marches any farther, come "to the right-about face," at least till he has time to consider where he is marching to.

When I see a woman scolding her husband without a cause, and pouring on his back, volley after volley, I think to myself, friend if I was in your place, I would come "to the right-about face," at least till she shut the gate of her volubility, and ceased firing.

When I see a Farmer liquidating his farm, and converting it into old "Jamaica," to gratify his palate, I think it would be well for him to come to the "Right-about" and reflect whether he would have sufficient courage, and strength of nerve, to "face" want if he made his appearance.

When I see a man dealing in scandal, and delighting in pouring his invectives on all around him, I conclude that he had better come to the "Right-about face" and if he has no better ammunition, to close his batteries and cease firing.

When I hear so many illiberal sarcasms uttered against the state of "steady habits," and her institutions, and orders given for a general charge, and destruction of her magazine, I guess it might be proper to halt, and come to the "right-about face," and reflect whether there won't be danger of our being all blown up together.

When I see a Merchant, in these days of inundations, both of water and goods, extending his business far beyond his capital, I conclude that necessity will soon bring him to the "right-about face," and cause him to make a sudden halt.

INDEPENDENT NOMINATION.

For GOVERNOR,
Gen. JOSEPH HEISTER.

SENATE,
JOHN GILMORE, of Butler.

ASSEMBLY,
WILLIAM WILKINS,
JOHN ROBINSON, of Elizabeth township
Col. JOHN ROSS, (St. Clair)
WILLIAM AYRES, of Butler.

COMMISSIONER,
ALEX. LOGAN,

AUDITOR,
HENRY BELTZHOOVER.

We are informed, (says the Philadelphia Gazette) that the Franklin, 74, Commodore Stewart, is under sailing orders, and will leave the Delaware as soon as the Hon. Richard Rush is ready to embark. The Franklin is to convey Mr. Rush to London, who is appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of St. James. After landing the Minister, it is said she will visit the Mediterranean.

Many of our eastern administration prints (says the Albany Gazette) have become exceedingly alarmed, lest an union of parties should take place; and have accordingly set themselves right lustily at work in scattering among the people the firebrands of discord and contention. If there be in reality any prospect of such an union, we do not wonder at the fears they manifest. During violent party conflicts, it is an inevitable consequence that ignorance, dishonesty and political knavery should triumph. But when the passions of the people become somewhat allayed—when they have time and opportunity for sober reflection, they will generally discover and correct the errors they may have fallen into during the zeal, fury, and madness of party. No wonder, under these circumstances, that rogues and political mountebanks should be alarmed at every prospect of honest men once more coming in fashion.

Singular Presentment.—A grand jury in Tennessee, have presented a gentleman by the name of Forester, as a suitable candidate for the office of governor, of that state. This is surely a novel mode of nomination.

By an estimate from the actual surveys, under proper authority we learn (says the Newport Republican) that there is now standing in the State of Rhode Island, suitable timber sufficient to buil upwards of two thousand line of battle ships.

☞RARE LOTTERY INCIDENT.—The Ticket No. 19545, which came up a prize of $25,000 on the 7th ult. in the New-York Lottery, was sold at the lottery office of Messrs. S. & M. Allen, to the CHIEF WARRIOR of the Cherokee nation, who fought bravely with General Jackson, against the Creeks, and who is now a merchant of respectability in the Southern Woods.

"Don't you smell a rat?" said old Clubstopper to his son. "No," said the youth, "I smell nothing at all." By the by there was a dead horse in the neighborhood, and the fogo was intolerable. But Dicky Clubstopper knew very well that if he should answer "yes," his daddy would put him upon the track, and compel him to hunt for the object. Such an answer he thought inexpedient. Because upon finding the dead horse, his daddy would have ordered Dicky to bury him. Therefore it saved a deal of trouble to answer directly "No, sir, I smell nothing at all."

This is exactly the case of the patent democrats. If you ask them, well gentlemen whats your opinion now? You see the people of the borough are no longer to be gull'd. Don't you smell the rat? No, we smell nothing at all.

Well gentlemen, the Bank business at Harrisburg is not yet completely varnished. The people think they smell a rat there; do you smell any thing? No we smell nothing at all.

But gentlemen don't you think that the exchange with the western merchant has a little taint; don't you smell something here? No, we smell nothing at all.

Thus these honourable gentlemen answer all questions like Dicky Clubstopper, right wrong. Their downcast looks and significant groans, however, speak volumes. Like Dicky, they smell the dead horse; but they answer No, lest they might be compelled to bury him.

Lancaster Jour.

The State of Connecticut (says the Boston Daily Advertiser of the 4th inst.) is entirely out of debt, having in the treasury the means for paying all outstanding claims and besides possesses a fund, including the School Fund, amounting to one million nine hundred and forty-eight thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars and forty-five cents. This is a decisive indication of the prudence with which the pecuniary affairs of that state have been managed.

The Post-chaises between N. York and Philadelphia continue to meet with great encouragement; they are an expeditious and very pleasant mode of travelling, and subject to no delays. This improvement in travelling is amongst the first advantages in the prosecution of our internal commerce.—Nat. Adv.

At the last dates from Boston, no essential progress had been made in the campaign against the great Serpent, though one of the monsters of his suite had been captured and slay'd and his exuviæ exhibited in the Salem museum. This little monster is represented as being about nine feet long, and a non-descript. Some having imagined it to be the progeny of the old serpent, and begin to entertain an apprehension that our coast will be long infested with this terrible brood. This, however, seems to be suggested jocularly, to sport with the undue fears which the ignorant entertain on the subject. It is well known that animals are less prolific in proportion to their bulk and their longevity. The whale, which is viviparous, produces only one, or at most two, at a birth. There is, therefore, no reason to dread the sudden multiplication of the enormous animal which now alarms our citizens. A great variety of sea-serpents are known to naturalists, though few have been accurately described. Should our seamen succeed in taking this, it would add much to zoology.

FOR THE GAZETTE.

DRAMATICUS.

On Wednesday evening, Coleman's celebrated Comedy of the 'Jealous Wife' was performed.

The house was respectably filled, and never perhaps in the annals of the drama did any lady appear to greater advantage than Mrs. Entwisle.

The character of 'Mrs. Oakly,' is one admirably calculated to shew her various powers. When the green eyed monster, jealousy, had infused the contents of his poisoned chalice into her bosom, when her suspicions were converted as she thought into certainty, then was she truly great. Perhaps no actress in the world ever exceeded in the scene, where affecting to be ill she threw herself into the chair endeavoring to awaken Mr. Oakly's sensibility to her situation—who paying no attention himself and not allowing others to pay any attention to her importunities, she arose with sullen majesty; the very expression of her countenance spoke volumes—for several minutes the house was convulsed with applause which was most richly merited.

Mr. Entwisle had an opportunity of shewing what we stated before, that versatility of his talents in the character of 'Sir Harry Beagle,' which he sustained throughout to great advantage.

Mr. Hutton was highly respectable in Mr. Oakly, and proves that he is calculated to shine in genteel comedy. The ladies and gentlemen who compose the dramatic corps, deserve great credit for their assiduity and attention, as throughout the whole performance, there was not a single deviation from the author, or the least impediment.

On Friday evening the 'Busy Body' with the afterpiece of 'Catherine & Petruchio' was announced for representation, but on the curtain's rising Mr. Hutton advanced to the proscenium and in a dignified and impressive manner stated, that in consequence of the serious indisposition of Mr. Entwisle, the cause of which he believed was generally known, they must be under the necessity of changing the entertainment; and so circumstanced, apppealed to the candour and liberality of an enlightned audience—and proposed substituting the 'Weathercock' with the interlude of 'Sylvester Daggerwood' and the farce of 'No Song no Supper':—He was received with great applause, and the entertainments immediately commenced.

Mr. Monier in 'Tristram Fickle' was not so happy as in many other characters, he did not infuse into it that volatile eccentricity which is its very soul; and this gentlemans's orthoepy was on this occasion at least, extremely indifferent—with a variety of other mistakes; and in this corps there can be no excuse where there is such an excellent preceptress.

Mr. Hutton in 'Sylvester Daggerwood,' was good, few better, but he will not bear comparison with Mr. Jefferson or the late Mr. Twaits.

In short, taking all the circumstances into consideration the amusements of the evening went off tolerably well.

This question has been frequently asked by the fair sex, why no female was ever initiated into the sublime mysteries of Masonry? And indeed it has sometimes furnished grounds of complaint to some worthy helpmates, that their husbands should presume to perform any action, without first submitting it, in all its bearings and consequences, to their consideration, and obtaining their approbation;—And no satisfactory reason has ever been assigned though it has often been attempted, and some fictitious objections have been plausibly, though imprudently suggested, to the infinite prejudice of the female character (such as their utter inability to govern their tongues, &c.) But at a late celebration of St. John's Day, in a neighboring town, the true cause was happily developed in the following toast, which it is presumed will supercede the necessity of all further inquiry.

"The Fair Sex.—Whose smiles alone make life desirable, and who are excluded from our lodges not because they are deemed unworthy, but because their virtues are so steadfast, as not to need artificial support. Con. Gaz.
